Carol Dalton Statement

My search for ways to say what I feel about nature continues in my recent paintings. During the last year I have been walking most mornings along the Carquinez Strait, the narrow wate rway connecting the San Francisco Bay with the Sierra watersh ed. I see patterns on the water made by wind, slowmoving at times with light dancing on the surface, with those eff ects seen against contrasting textures along the stony shor e. Colors change seasonally from green to gold on nea rby hills. When I paint, I will often focus on one or two elem ents and merge them together. Surface textures of th e painting's support and the paint's varying viscosities co ntribute to the sense that the final image is one that has ris en out of the materials' makings. I want the viewer to "feel th e painting", to be energized by its patterned movements and the e sensuality of distilled subtle qualities of color, textur e and light. Nature has been my savior during a most chall enging year in memory, both personally and globally. I am g rateful to be replenished by my surroundings and my hope is the at viewers will find in my work the evidence of those restorativ e powers that the landscape holds for me.
